

Golden facility full-timer Malibu always enjoys the residents at Slate Valley Center.

Resident Gene Smith of Gansevoort, New York, embraces one-year-old Old English Bulldog Keelo.

Therapy dog appreciation day celebrated at Slate Valley Center

April 11 was Therapy Dog Appreciation Day and at Slate Valley Center on State Route 40 in Granville, the recreation department, headed by director Andrea Kelley, had three gorgeous pooches visit with both the residents and staff.

The residents enjoyed meeting these lovable and spunky young dogs.

There was the cute high-energy Welsh Corgi puppy named Rosie, who is owned by B-wing unit supervisor Anne Nilsen.

Kelley brought in Keelo, a one-year-old Old English Bulldog. Keelo is no stranger to the center, as the dog works part-time and comes in two to three days a week and knows the residents well.

Finally, Slate Valley full-timer Malibu, a five-month-old yellow lab owned by director of nursing Tamme Taran, is very playful.

"Every year when April 11 rolls around, everyone here is excited that after breakfast the residents get to spend quality time with these great dogs," said Kelley. "A week or so before, we ask the staff if they can bring in their dogs, and we get a nice turnout."

Just being around dogs provides high-quality psychological therapy. Knowing that dogs have this positive mental effect on humans is knowledge that dates only to the 1960s. Studies have also discovered that pets in general can lead to longevity in life.
